Allen Falkner

Allen Falkner (born April 17, 1969) is founder of TSD, the first suspension group. He is often referred to as the Father of Modern Suspension and is considered the first to bring body suspension to the mainstream.[1]

Falkner is also professional body piercer with a long and established history (he was one of the first apprentices of Fakir Musafar), as well as a multi-faceted body artist.

He was hired to help realize the body suspension stunt of Criss Angel for his TV show Mindfreak in which he was suspended in suicide position from a helicopter flying over the mountains in the Valley of Fire.

Falkner was formerly married to model and performer Masuimi Max and was instrumental in launching her career.

He also appeared in the movie Modify.

The 6 Most Bizarre Safe For Work Fetishes

The Internet has been a miracle for sex fetishists, not just because of the availability of porn in their specific category, but because of how it has broadened everybody's horizons. No matter how weird your turn-ons are, there is always somebody out there into weirder shit.

And as we've pointed out before, there are some people who enjoy fetishes so far removed from the concept of sex that they don't bear to be mentioned together in the same sentence. These are fully clothed, non-sexual images and videos that still serve as wank material for vast audiences of otherwise normal people. So here's a tribute to those who get off on ...

#6. Girls Stuck in Quicksand

This is a perfect example of a nearly "safe for work" fetish -- it requires no nudity or sex, and it in fact involves a situation in which sex would be utterly impossible. It's people who get aroused at the sight of fully clothed women sinking in quicksand:

A cursory search online would reveal tons of sites dedicated to compiling clips from various sources of girls drowning in quicksand, and then there are the niche video sites dedicated to providing original content (there probably is a booming industry in quicksand pit installation these days). On those sites, elaborate storylines are created to justify how these lovely ladies came to be trapped in the unforgiving, bottomless pit of certain-yet-sexy death.

So ... maybe the quicksand thing triggers some "damsel in distress" response in the brain's boner cortex? If there's anything lonely Internet tough guys love, it's sitting behind their keyboards visualizing all the many ways they would totally jump in and save the unfortunate lady fake drowning in a boggy marsh. But the fact that they're jerking off to the "trapped and terrified" part, rather than the sexy rescue, really puts a darker spin on the whole thing. We'd prefer not to think any more about it.

Although we should note how many people on YouTube keep asking if the women in the quicksand actually drowned in the videos.

#5. Girls Licking Doorknobs

Japan's perversity is one of the longest running jokes on the Internet, but the explanation behind it is fairly straightforward: Japanese porn censorship laws are some of the most draconian out there, and they simply force people to be more creative about what they masturbate to. And, as anybody with a porn addiction can tell you, in order to keep things fresh, you have to get a bit weird. Japan, always on the cutting edge of innovation, simply took this idea and ran with it all the way to Planet Dick Tentacle, which brings us to these images of girls licking doorknobs.

Now, let's be clear: Men (and presumably some women) get turned on by the sight of females licking anything. The curse of being a woman is knowing that you can't eat an ice cream cone or a banana in public without several nearby males achieving a state of semi-arousal. But ... doorknobs? You don't have to be a germaphobe to know that these are the filthiest surfaces in your entire house, the toilet included. Is that the turn-on here? That the women are made to lick something crawling with more bacteria than a Taco Bell? Is it just supposed to be degrading?

But again, absolutely no nudity of any kind is involved in the doorknob fetish, although they do mix it up from time to time: There are images of girls in glasses licking doorknobs, girls in school uniforms licking doorknobs surrounded by candy, and so on.

The trend is a fairly big deal in Japan, even getting featured on national television. The closest we can figure is that the audience is imagining the woman kneeling down to perform oral sex on a robot, who has shoved his metal dick through the door.

#4. Inflatable Rubber Suits

Remember the scene in Charlie and the Chocolate Factory where Violet Beauregarde eats some forbidden candy and blows up like a balloon? And then they have to just roll her out of the room? Well, apparently some people can't watch that scene without becoming inexplicably aroused.

This fetish is pretty similar to balloon fetishes, or maybe it's the opposite, because instead of popping the balloon, you are the balloon.

Researchers have yet to determine what exactly it is about inflatable rubber suits getting filled with air that turns people on, but we have to admit that putting one of those on and just bouncing around would be fun as hell.

The suits are often double-layered and designed in such a way that the outer layer gets filled with air and expands, while the second suit compresses and squeezes against the unfortunate (or fortunate, we guess) person enclosed within. So maybe that's it? It's like a full-body air massage? Either way, thanks to the Internet, we know there are a whole bunch of people who are into it: And since there is no fetish that can't be made more alarming with the addition of furies, sure enough there are inflatable suits made to look like cows, raccoons, and even dragons.

Inflatable suits are quite expensive, but the guys on this forum are helpful enough to provide DIY tips on how to build your very own personal sex blimp. Now, if one of these springs a leak, do you go zipping around the room making that farting sound?

#3. Nose-Picking, Snot-Eating, Sneezing

Nasophiles, as scientists choose to call them, are turned on by the sight, shape, and (bizarrely enough) thought of making love (somehow) to noses.

There are basically two groups of nose enthusiasts. The first is those who are turned on by the shapes and sizes of noses and nostrils. This group gets off on watching weird videos of human noses transforming into noses of animals and other weird objects, and of fondling noses

The second group gets turned on by watching people sneezing or picking and/or eating snot out of their noses. Here, let's let one enthusiast describe it in his own words:

"Ever since I can remember I have been turned on by seeing/watching a girl or woman pick their nose. It started sometime in my teens. I would see the occasional lady in a car or a girl at school pick and I would get a quick erection.

"As I grew older I thought it would be great to marry a lovely woman that picked her nose. I remember when I was dating my wife, I caught one of her roommates picking her nose. I thought, Wow, if my girlfriend would only pick. Well, we ended up getting married, and it finally happened. It was on a Sunday afternoon and we were taking a nap. She woke up before me and started to read a book. I woke up and didn't move but opened an eye and looked over and there she was picking away! It gave me an instant erection." And then there are the sneeze aficionados. For them, the unrestrained release of energy that occurs during a sneeze, as well as the facial expression that goes with it, turns them on to no end. Oddly, this is the one that's easiest to get -- the involuntary spasm and release of fluid is physiologically like a mini orgasm (and sneezes do trigger orgasms in some women -- Google it!).

Sneeze fetishists are a truly picky bunch, so not every type of sneeze will do. Some prefer the dry sneezes triggered by allergies, while others are turned on exclusively by the heavy sneeze associated with a cold. According to some, the sensation right before the act of sneezing is almost like foreplay, grabbing the tissue is likened to taking out your condom, and the act of cleaning yourself up after the sneeze is absolutely like cleaning up after sex.

#2. Wool

So there appears to be a whole range of fetishes based entirely on things that would kill the mood for someone else -- somebody blowing gross snot out of their nose, dying horribly in the jungle, etc. It's like that's the point -- how crazily removed these things are from traditional turn-ons. For instance, when you think of knitting or wool, you picture grandmothers in rocking chairs making adorable hats and sweaters for their grandchildren. And sure enough, there are guys who find that unspeakably erotic.

The wool fetish community is a close-knit one (ha!), and they prefer to call themselves "woolies." Woolies are really big on the quality of the fabric used to knit the wool. It cannot be just any wool off the streets -- nothing but the best will do. But that makes sense if you're encasing your entire goddamned body in it:

The fetish can range from women just preferring to wear turtleneck sweaters to people being completely encased in wool outfits to people who practice "mummification," which is where they will completely wrap themselves -- particularly their heads -- in wool blankets. Which you'd think would make it somewhat difficult to breathe and live and so on, but since when has that stopped anybody?

And in case you're wondering, yes, you can find "wool condoms" that helpfully note that they cannot be used as a form of birth control. What? Why not?

#1. Human Furniture

This fetish is known as forniphilia, and it involves tying up your significant other and using them as a piece of furniture for hours on end. Pretty straightforward, really.

On one hand, we totally get role-playing -- half of the people you know have probably played a nice round of "sexy firefighter rescues sexy French maid" as a prelude to vigorous porking. And lots of people enjoy role play that involves submission or domination, 50 Shades-style. But it seems like the role-playing lacks some of the thrill when one of the partners is playing the role of an inanimate object.

But maybe that's part of it -- it's a form of bondage and/or S&M where people "punish" their mate by making them pose for long periods of time as things like coat racks or even ironing boards. (Helpful hint from a forniphiliac: Set your iron to the "low" setting if you want your slave to get a warm massage, or to "max" if you're sadistic.)

VIVID RADIO TO LAUNCH ON SIRIUSXM

VIVID
RADIO

Vivid Entertainment has taken over the Radio Sex slot on SiriusXM channel 102 and will officially launch Vivid Radio on Nov. 18.

Currently, Vivid Radio is offering previews on channel 102 of what's to come on the station, which made the changeover this morning.

Vivid Radio will broadcast live from Vivid's L.A., featuring the famous Vivid Girls, celebrity sex tape stars and other top adult performers. Content will cover the "entire spectrum of sexual adventure," from behind-the-scenes action to explicit entertainment.

"We are thrilled to launch Vivid Radio on SiriusXM," said Steven Hirsch, founder/co-chairman of Vivid Entertainment. "We look forward to bringing our innovative style and close relationships both inside and outside the industry, to create a fresh new take on the adult radio format."

Radio Sex, operated by Manwin, was rebranded in January; the SiriusXM station previously was known as Spice Radio. The station went off SiriusXM last night.

Vivid is one of the most prolific adult brand operators and licensors.

In addition to Vivid Radio, there's Vivid.com and, of course, its adult movies, as well as VividTV, VividTouch, Vivid Cams, Vivid Vodka and Vivid Condoms. It also licensed its brand for gentlemen's clubs and opened locations in Charlotte, Miami, Los Angeles and New York with commitments in a host of other major cities.

Owen Wilson developing TV drama based on Eighties porn industry

He made his name as the funny guy in comedies such as Wedding Crashers and Zoolander. And now Owen Wilson is branching out into new, decidedly more risque territory. The 44-year-old is developing a series about the porn industry set in the Ronald Reagan-era for the Starz network. Wilson is teaming up with Law And Order writer/producer Rene Balcer to develop the hour-long TV show, called WonderWorld. The series, inspired by a true story, is set in the Eighties and follows two FBI agents as they 'infiltrate the violent Mob-controlled porn industry,' according to the show's logline. Wilson will executive produce the show, while Balcer will serve as writer and showrunner if the series gets picked up. Wilson has produced films such as The Royal Tenenbaums and Rushmore. Meanwhile, the actor is set to become a father for the second time with personal trainer Caroline Lindqvist, who is thought to be due to give birth in January. The pair are no longer together, however. But Wilson, who has recently been spotted out kissing a mystery brunette, is apparently 'involved' with the pregnancy. 'Owen is very involved with the pregnancy. He isn't in a relationship with Caroline, nor do they plan to be in one, but he is very supportive of everything,' a source has told Us Weekly. 'They see each other and talk often about what they want for the child. Owen is very open-minded about everything and has told Caroline he will do whatever he can.'

THE HARD SCORE

by Pat "Two Dogs" Snow

To Bark Back Email:
tx2dogs@verizon.net

Frustrated. A psychological involvement specifically identified with sports fans. It's known to tear fans into two moments of anguish, the frustrated and the disgusted.

Currently this dilemma is afflicting the fans of the Dallas Cowboys.

Is there a cure? For many it would be a new owner. For others a new coach, new staff, and new quarterback. And for others, an entirely new team.

Is the condition permanent? Well, a winning season has been known to help, but after two decades there's nobody left who knows what that is.

Do we know what brought this recurrence to the surface?

Yes, it was called Ryan's revenge. Apparently from how he left the Cowboys he's a direct heir to Montezuma.

Are there other cases of frustrated? Yeah, sure. How would you like to be a Falcons or a Texan fan, those folk had, and that's a key word here, HAD high hopes for the season. Maybe go ahead and toss in the Giants and Ravens.

Here's the rhetorical question of the century, do you think Ryan's revenge was satisfied? Considering what they did to Dallas you can well imagine it was also very satisfactory.

That Saints defensive game plan did exactly what I thought; it brought ruin to the Cowboys. It brought it, set it on the table, helped with the tableware, and then, for dessert, cleared the dishes for them. That dish was served cold.

In the first post-game interview, Jerry Jones (we don't know if he was speaking as owner, GM, or both, he didn't clarify that for us), said he really felt going into the game that it was going to be the same as the contest with the Broncos. Unless he meant losing I can't figure what else he thought was going to be the same.

Jones's team last year set records and this year they have set even more and we're still early in the process. Unfortunately these records are all, ALL, the wrong kind to have in the books asterisked with your name.

Since Jones fired Jimmy Johnson he has struggled, no, that's not it, been highly unsuccessful, yeah, that's it, in putting together a competitive team. He can't find a coach and he can't find players. Through additionally mismanaging the budget, he's leveraged the team into a debt program that will take years to get balanced. Which means the team's ability to bring in qualified personnel has been shackled.

While the fans of Atlanta and Houston and New York do have something positive to look forward to, well, you frustrated Dallas fans are swimming in quicksand. Good luck.

NFL Week 10 Review

Any real surprises take place? Well, you can't really call the Giants and Steelers beating the Raiders and Bills much of a surprise. With Rodgers out the Eagles taking the Packers wasn't a surprise, but how hard it was for them, well, that told us more about how weak Philly really is.

No, the Panthers beating, like so barely only a whisker could get through, the 49ers wasn't a surprise. I've been touting Carolina's defense the last two years, that's never been their problem. The score was 10-9, so no, the Panthers aren't going to the Super Bowl.

Nor was the Cardinals beating the Texans, and that still wasn't like running your car into an electrical power plant.

The Rams kicking the stuffing out of the Colts, now that was a surprise. Do I think it's an omen about either team? No, not really. Unless something has fallen off its tracks Indy probably just had an off day. The Rams have been playing tough, and replacement QB Kellen Clemens is showing he's got starter capability, maybe enough to replace Bradford.

NFL Week 11

Bye week: Cowboys, Rams

Thursday

Both coming off losses, the Colts (6-3) at Titans (4-5). This is a division game and for all practical purposes, a must win for Tennessee. Indy needs the win to keep in the race for the second bye week in the first round of the playoffs, the first right now owned by the Patriots. This'll get the teeth sharpened up for the weekend.

Sunday Noon CST

You got eight early and not a one that inspires lighting the grill. Save your burger time for the afternoon games. There are a couple of appetizers in the bunch, let's muss up this pile and see where they are.

The no longer ready for prime time: Raiders (3-6) at Texans (2-7); Cards (5-4) at Jags (1-8); Falcons (2-7) at Bucs (0-8); Lions (6-3) at Steelers (3-6); Redskins (3-6) at Eagles (5-5); and, Jets ((5-4) at Bills (3-7).

Is there any interest in that pack at all? Now's the time for a team that has playoff aspirations to beat weaker teams, that means the Cards, Lions, and Jets should take their games if they're ready to advance. Washington has a chance to knock off Philly which opens the door more to see who's going to put the nail in Dallas's coffin.

The appetizers: Browns (4-5) at Bengals (6-4); and, Ravens (4-5) at Bears (5-4). Cleveland deserves the award for worst team to turn around under duress. Yeah, they have a fifty/fifty split to beat Cincinnati. If the Bengals Dalton doesn't get his head screwed on right he's gonna play them out of the upside. Browns coming off bye week.

Baltimore isn’t exactly a sinking ship, no, but the question is still out there, are the bilge pumps going to work or not? If the Ravens want to stay afloat for the season they have to beat Chicago. The Bears screwed up by bringing Cutler back too soon, probably because he got worried when McCown won a game. He needs to be.

3:30 CST

Four on the platter, three weak and one a bloody nose. Three to watch go by: Chargers (4-5) at Dolphins (4-4); Vikings (2-7) at Seahawks (9-1); and, Packers (5-4) at Giants (3-6). It doesn’t matter if San Diego or Miami win. Minnesota isn’t going to upset Seattle. Green Bay is possibly facing a trap game, so if you have to watch one of these, take that one.

Bring the gauze pad: 49ers (6-3) at Saints (7-2). San Francisco has one shot at this, and that’s take Brees down and out, they’ve got the defense to do it and his offense is vulnerable to it. Hell, even the Cowboys got to Brees. The Saints have to protect Brees by keeping Kaepernick off the field, and they’ve got the means to confuse him.

Here’s what you’ve been waiting all day for. Some of you have been waiting all season for this. It’s a classic matchup and is going to address the age old question, what happens when a Class A offense squares off with a Class A defense.

Chiefs (9-0) at Broncos (8-1). Denver’s offensive line has been letting d-men get to Manning the last three games, and those weren’t defenses that could be confused as being anywhere near as good as KC’s. It’s more than a possibility they knock Peyton out of the game, or at least severely hobble him.

While Denver’s defense is just above average, their task is to stop KC’s plink and plunk offense. So far, while everybody laughs, nobody has been able to do it. The Chief’s offensive philosophy is, apparently, you don’t have to put up 35 points a game to win, you just have to put up one more point than the other guy. Hey, it works.

The rested and confident Chiefs are coming off a bye week while Denver’s coming back from the Chargers busting Peyton’s pins. Don’t think KC doesn’t know that.

This is a division game, a game for a bye or wild card, and a game that’ll decide who gets to face the Patriots if all else holds steady. This is gonna be a good football game.

Monday Night Football

Well, believe your lucky stars or not, you get round 2 of high octane, as in top offense again meets up with top defense.

Patriots (7-2) at Panthers (6-3). Carolina finally beat a ranked team and now are convinced they’re a, drum roll maestro, a “team of destiny”. Please, give me a break. That said, confidence and momentum have carried teams beyond what they’ve normally been capable of before.

And Brady’s playing with a no-name receiving corps. Problem for Carolinaiis, Brady doesn’t really particularly give a rats because he’ll get whoever’s down the field the ball. That’s the difference between an A+ QB and a statistical wonder. Oops, didn’t mean to sneak in a reference to Romo there.

Carolina’s used to playing against top offenses in the NFC South, facing both Atlanta and New Orleans, so they’re not intimidated. Their problem is, will be, not going away anytime soon, trying to score more points than Brady. The Patriots are coming off a bye week while the Panthers are coming back from an extremely physical game with 49ers.

Is this a trap game for New England? No. Will this be a cakewalk for them? No. Will it be a close game? Yes. Does Carolina have a chance? Theoretically. What happens if Carolina wins? The East Coast finally gets a major earthquake while pigs are flying over.

Readers Response:

Two Dogs:

The NCAAMF targeting rule is inherently flawed and they either have no tool in place to make in-season corrections or are simply unwilling to admit, as usual, that they’ve made a mistake. When Baylor was hosting Oklahoma, a Sooner receiver catches a ball, and when noticing a near defender lowers his head while taking three steps. The defender switches from his cover man to this receiver and they collide, but not helmet to helmet. It’s a grand slam knock ‘em down highlight reel hit. The defender is flagged for targeting and ejected and a fifteen yard penalty assessed. The officials overturn the ejection but “have to” leave the penalty in place. Look, the receiver lowered his head prior to the hit, putting the defender into a position that his hit had no other way to take place. The receiver wasn’t defenseless. Defenseless should be when he’s actually vulnerable, like if he’s up in the air, but certainly not after he’s taken three steps with full possession.

Two Dogs:

You know what, this whole Miami Dolphins and Incognito thing just reeks of Parcells, especially when you hear that GM Ireland told Martin’s agent to have his guy punch Incognito. The whole locker room scenario of intimidation smells of Parcells attitude and coaching “methods”. My uncle played for Parcells at Air Force and over the years used to describe events that this guy would impose on the players. If there’s a real investigation it needs to go back to when Parcells was brought in and how he hired Ireland and instituted the policy and procedures protocols.

Darren – Boulder
Darren:

I suspect it’s not going to go that far or in that direction.
TD

Two Dogs:

The NCAA placement system in standings is another joke. Baylor’s 8-0, 5-0 in conference and Texas is 7-2 but 6-0 in conference so Texas is in first place in the Big 12. That’s nothing but a farce. Baylor’s making a run for the National Championship Game and Texas isn’t. Overall wins should be the leader of conference, any other method, or more precise, the NCAA’s dumb method, should not ever be used.

Marcus – Temple

Marcus:

Not only are the NCAA’s investigations and discipline policy’s under attack, but rules like this one are, too. Right now Baylor is ranked fifth in the country with an 8-0 record while Stanford is ranked fourth with 8-1, and my opinion is Baylor deserves fourth. I wouldn’t go higher because those above are 9-0. If Baylor wins out they deserve to be in the top four for the first year playoffs.

Study: Marijuana Consumers More Knowledgeable About Substance's Health Effects Than Non-Users

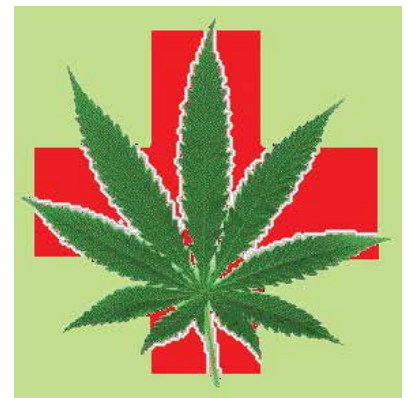

Zurich, Switzerland: People who consume cannabis are more likely to be knowledgeable about the substance's health effects than are those who abstain from it, according to survey data reported online in the International Journal of Public Health Policy.

Researchers at the University of Zurich in Switzerland assessed the health literacy of some 12,000 male subjects. Investigators reported that those subjects who consumed cannabis, alcohol, and tobacco "searched for information about substances significantly more often via the Internet than abstainers." These subjects also "reported better knowledge of risks associated with substance use and a marginally better ability to understand health information than abstainers," the authors found.

In particular, subjects who reported consuming cannabis at least once per week were four times more likely to search for health-related information as compared those who abstained, the study found.

Researchers concluded, "Substance users appear to be more informed and knowledgeable about the risks of substance use than non-users."

For more information, please contact Paul Armentano, NORML Deputy Director, at: paul@norml.org. Full text of the study, "Health literacy and substance use in young Swiss men," appears in the International Journal of Public Health Policy.

Marijuana - A cure for cancer?

(NaturalNews) If you're over 21, marijuana is legal to smoke and have in possession (under 1 ounce) here in the state of Washington. Many users do so for the effects the THC found in marijuana has on the body. THC is the substance in marijuana that gets you "felling high". But recently, through some breakthrough research, studies have shown that the substance Cannabidiol (CBD), also found in marijuana, has the potential to be a game changer in the fight against cancer.

Here in Seattle, medical marijuana is primarily prescribed to help terminally ill patients and those receiving painful medical treatments to help deal with the pain. It is also prescribed for people with high levels of anxiety or severe depression. But, new research being done has shown more than just pain relieving or mood enhancing effects; it could help to treat and - even better - reverse cancer.

The evidence

Studies were recently completed by the California Pacific Medical Center in the San Francisco Bay area. The compound CBD was tested on animals with cancer as an alternative treatment. They found there was a disruption in the growth of tumors cells. CBD is a natural defense mechanism in the cannabis plant. In fact, CBD makes up about 40 percent of the cannabis plant matter. CBD is considered non-psychoactive, whereas THC is psychoactive. Basically, CBD doesn't give you the "high feelings" associated with THC, but it is showing promise in stopping or even reversing the effects of cancer on the body.

By manipulating the breeding of the plants to achieve high contents of CBD and low content of THC, this could give a very low psychoactive response yet provide all the cancer fighting benefits of the CBD.

This breakthrough discovery is on the verge of being tested on humans with both brain cancer and breast cancer. If this works, marijuana could be the single biggest breakthrough treatment we've seen for cancer; perhaps ever!

If Superheroes Were Assholes

We hear they've made another Iron Man movie. But the thing about that franchise is that even a superhero as supposedly flawed as the alcoholic Tony Stark, never really cuts loose and just acts like an asshole for a day.

Let's face it, if we had super powers and lived above the law, it would be almost impossible to not let our inner dick shine through. We asked you to show us via Photoshop what a world of douchebag superheroes would look like, and offered $50 to the winner. The results:

Mail-Order Brides

Mail-order bride is a label applied to a woman who publishes her intent to marry someone from another – usually more financially developed – country. Historically, mail-order brides were women who listed themselves in catalogs and were selected by men for marriage. Sometimes the men and women involved were citizens of different countries, e.g. women from European countries moving to the United States during the 18th and 19th centuries, and sometimes they involved citizens of the same country.

Most people think that Russian brides are desperate women who want nothing more than to marry a foreigner (preferably American) to get the hell out of Russia and start a new life. But in fact, this is almost always incorrect. Russia has a man shortage; there are roughly 8 men for every 10 women in a culture which is very marriage-oriented. Consequently, many Russian women are compelled to look outside of Russia for a husband. As one mail order bride company says: "[Russian Brides] feel as if you were one of the guys who would approach her at a bar: where she can say, "yes" if she likes you, and "thanks, but no, thanks" if she doesn't."

Being a mail-order bride can be very dangerous. There are at least four recent cases of American men murdering (sometimes quite brutally) their mail-order bride. But it does go both ways: there is also a case of a mail-order bride murdering her American husband. Before involving yourself in the mail order marriage industry, it pays to really consider the reasons behind your future wife or husband using this method to find their partner for life. You might get lucky and meet someone leaving their home country for the reasons cited in item 10, but you might be one of the unlucky ones who ends up dead.

The United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) reports that "...marriages arranged through [mail order bride] services would appear to have a lower divorce rate than the nation as a whole, fully 80 percent of these marriages having lasted over the years for which reports are available." The USCIS also reports that "... mail-order bride and e-mail correspondence services result in 4,000 to 6,000 marriages between U.S. men and foreign brides each year."

The concept of mail-order brides was first seen on the American frontier during the mid-1800s. Men from the East were migrating West in hopes of claiming land, farming, establishing businesses, and finding gold. Most of these men found financial success in the migration West, but the one thing that was missing was the company of a wife. Very few women lived in the West at this time, so it was hard for these men to settle down and start a family. Their only choice was to attract women living back East; the men wrote letters to churches and published personal advertisements in magazines and newspapers. In return, the women would write to the men and send them photographs of themselves.

At least two types of "international marriage agencies" exist. The first type sells female clients' contact information and encourages men and women to correspond prior to meeting. The second type offers "group tours" for men who want to travel around a foreign country and meet up to a hundred women at social events organized by the agency. If an American male wishes to use the first type, they must supply mental health information and criminal history, and, if they do make a match, will eventually be required to meet the bride in person before she can obtain a US visa.

There is a lot of money to be made in the mail order bride industry. In Taiwan, mail-order brides are sourced primarily from Mainland China and Southeast Asia, especially Vietnam. The common age range for Vietnam women range from 20 to 28 years of age. On average, Taiwanese men spend USD $10,000 on this type of marriage; however, only USD $500 to USD $1,000 dollars will be received by the bride's family and the remainder taken by marriage brokers of the groom and the bride. That is a damn high profit margin.

The Coolest Car In America Is Turning 50

Ford is celebrating 50 years of the Mustang in 2014, and it's a party that's been going continuously since Day 1. The original pony car has been raced, written and sung about. It's been on film, driven by characters from Carl Kolchak to Frank Bullitt to James Bond. Most active driving enthusiasts have never known a world without the Mustang. Thankfully, we probably never will.

1964 - Ford introduces the Mustang at the 1964 New York World's Fair on April 17th with an announced price of $2,368. Two days earlier -- almost by accident -- the first Mustang sells to a young Chicago teacher. She owns it to this day.

1965 - As U.S. audiences watch the Mustang trifle with James Bond in Goldfinger, a potent weapon of a different kind debuts: the Shelby GT 350 and its 306-horsepower, 289-cid V-8.

1966 - Early in the year, Mustang sales pass 1 million. Meanwhile, 1,000 GT350-H "rent-a-racer" cars are developed in a deal between Carroll Shelby and Hertz. Don't be gentle, it's a rental.

1967 - The 2+2 model abandons its semi-notchback look and becomes a true fastback. The Shelby GT500 launches with a 428-cid V-8 and (claimed) 355 horsepower. This year's fastback finds fame as "Eleanor" in the 2000 remake of the movie Gone with the Wind. An Eleanor Mustang prepped for the film auctions for $1 million in 2013.

1968 - Engine options expand to include the 302-cid V-8, 427-cid V-8 and 428 Cobra Jet. A Highland Green fastback is driven to stardom by Steve McQueen in Bullitt, producing one of the most memorable car chases in cinema history.

1970 - Ram-air "Shaker" hood scoops come with Mustangs packing 351-cid V-8 or larger engines. One look at this car makes it easy to spot the design influences on newer Mustangs.

1971 - A radical change, but not the first to hit Mustangs in the '70s. The biggest Mustangs to date (and probably, ever) eclipse the originals by nearly a foot in length and 600 pounds in weight. Sean Connery returns as James Bond, driving a new Mach 1 with Jill St. John in Diamonds Are Forever.

1973 is the final year a convertible version is available for almost a full decade. Filming is underway for the original Gone with the Wind, though the featured Eleanor Mustang is not a '67, but from this generation.

1974 - Another radical change debuts with the Mustang II. This time, the new car is shorter than either Mustang before it. And there's also no V-8 power on the menu, but buyers initially embrace the new car.

1976 - The Cobra II package joins the lineup, replete with non-functional hood scoop, racing stripes and spoilers. This is the ride of choice for Farrah Fawcett as Jill Monroe in the Charlie's Angels television series.

1979 - Mustang enthusiasts suspend weeping and gnashing of teeth with the new Fox platform and a complete redesign. Despite extra length and height, it's still 200 pounds lighter than the outgoing Mustang II.

1980 - The 5.0-liter V-8 and 2.8-liter V-6 engines are put out to pasture. In come a 3.3-liter inline six and a 4.2-liter V-8, the latter making all of 119 horsepower. Oddly enough, the turbocharged four-cylinder is the most powerful Mustang, at 140 horsepower.

1982 - The Mustang GT returns, and with it comes the 5.0-liter V-8 again, beefed up to 157 horsepower and riding a four-speed manual. This is also the powertrain in a new Special Services Package ordered by the California Highway Patrol, beginning a tradition that lasts over a decade.

1983 - The Mustang convertible is back after a decade and proves a hit.

1984 - On the Mustang's 20th anniversary, Ford's Special Vehicle Operations creates the Mustang SVO. Its turbocharged and intercooled 2.3-liter four-cylinder delivers 175 horsepower and is supported with bigger tires, better brakes and unique bodywork. Superior in technology (and price), it's still overshadowed performance-wise by its GT sibling.

1987 - Mustang undergoes a restyle and gains a new "aero" body. The SVO goes away, so does the V-6 and trim levels are simplified to LX and GT. Interiors improve across the board and include better gauge clustering.

1988 - More than half the 211,225 Mustangs sold this year are powered by the 5.0-liter V-8.

1989 - For the 25th anniversary, all Mustangs produced between April 17, 1989, and April 17, 1990, feature the galloping horse on the dash and "25 Years" inscription.

1990 - Mustang now sports a driver-side airbag as standard equipment, at the expense of the tilt steering wheel.

1992 - After quietly building momentum previous years, the 5.0-equipped LX cars outsell all other models combined.

1993 - Its age clearly showing, Mustang's final year in this design sees Ford's new Special Vehicle Team (SVT) roll out the limited-production Cobra with subtle but distinct styling cues and performance upgrades. The Cobra R is even hotter. Only 107 are built, and they're all spoken for before production begins. 1994 - For its 30th anniversary, Mustang gets a dramatic restyle. It manages to acknowledge its heritage while also appearing up-to-date. Fully 1,330 of the vehicle's 1,850 parts are changed.

1996 - Mustang GTs and SVT Mustang Cobras have the new overhead-cam 4.6-liter V-8. For GT cars, quoted power is unchanged at 215 horsepower. SVT Cobras get a thoroughly reworked aluminum, double-overhead-cam version of the engine, making 305 horsepower.

1999 - The New Edge style theme is more than just a name. This redesign gives Mustang sharply creased and pronounced lines. It's better under the body also, as the 3.8-liter V-6 offers 190 horsepower and the 4.6-liter V-8 gives 260.

2000 - Doing damage control after the '99 Cobra's misgivings, the third SVT Mustang Cobra R launches. And wow! This version has a 385-horsepower, 5.4-liter DOHC V-8 and features the first six-speed manual transmission ever offered in a Mustang. At almost $56,000, 300 are built and 300 are sold. Quickly.

2002 - The five-spoke wheels introduced for the Bullitt edition become options for regular models. Mustang becomes the last of the original pony cars. Its two closest rivals -- the Chevrolet Camaro and Pontiac Firebird -- reach the end of production.

2003 - The Mustang Mach 1 model returns with 305-horsepower, signature ram-air "Shaker" hood scoop and special 17-inch wheels. Better still is the Cobra, bolting on a supercharger and blowing out 390 horsepower.

2004 - Ford's 300 millionth car also happens to be a Mustang GT convertible 40th anniversary edition. This is the last year for Mustang production at the fabled Dearborn Assembly Plant, which had produced every model Mustang year since the car's inception.

2005 - New assembly at Flat Rock, Mich., also heralds a new platform, new style and new character. Ergonomic shortcomings are addressed in the cabin. Outside, it pays tribute to its '60s predecessors without pandering or looking instantly dated. V-6 cars' output is now 200 horsepower, while V-8s manage 300.

2007 - Forty years after Playboy Pink was a factory paint option, a special Warriors in Pink edition of Mustang is introduced to help raise funds for Susan G. Komen Race for the Cure breast cancer research. Meanwhile, the SVT-engineered Shelby GT500 is introduced.

2008 - A milestone is reached as the 9 millionth Mustang is sold. Buyer of the historic GT convertible -- Mustang enthusiast? Ford executive? -- is an Iowa farmer.

2010 - Mustang gets new, more muscular styling with features such as a power-dome hood and sequential turn signals. Handling is improved via suspension revisions. V-6 power stays the same, while V-8 engine output is now 315 horsepower.

2012 - Engineered to be the best-handling Mustang ever, the 2012 Boss 302 returns to the lineup for the first time in over 40 years with 444 horsepower and an intoxicating exhaust note. An even sharper Laguna Seca edition is offered.

2013 - At 662 horsepower, the Shelby GT500's supercharged 5.8-liter is the world's most powerful production V-8. We think that about says it all.

2014 - Flat Rock Assembly Plant celebrates the production of 1 million Mustangs, as anticipation already runs high for the vehicle's 50th anniversary next year.

Damsels in Distress Gallery IV

By: Ms. Misha Morê

Those who love bondage know it well: theirs is not a mania, it's an Art. Tying, tightening, pulling, knotting. A few gestures, repeated over and over again, exalted in a sort of rite that acquires its heathen sacredness: carefully studied movements, ropes, that are cleverly wound around the bust, limbs, wrists, ankles and knotted with the utmost care, a predicament position (the upturned foot plants, the head's inclination, the way the body hangs, the tension of muscles).

Some prefer to substitute ropes with silk ribbons not to hurt their victims-accomplices, since this erotic ceremony needs the consent of the one who will have to be made helpless, the woman that, in order to make it all more credible, will have herself gagged with a plaster or a handkerchief, while pretending to wriggle and struggle, opening her eyes wide out of terror.

Just like sweet Gwendolyn who, though repeatedly persecuted and captured by the vicious Sir D'Arcy, enjoyed being tied up and often proposed bondage meetings to her friend, U-69.

Her creator, the well-known John Willie, who could be defined as the first and only prophet of bondage had enclosed a letter he sent to a friend of his brief revelation on the art of tying. He knew every secret, since he himself practised the art with his models, who would go to his attic studio and of whom he took hundreds of pictures to make his drawings as true-to-life as possible.

While John Willie theorized and practised this, about 1951 or so, the New Yorker Irving Klaw prospered with his own anonymous small shop in the heart of the Big Apple. Irving Klaw monopolized the trade of taboo images during that period, especially with bondage, fetishism and light S&M: he commissioned Eric Stanton, Jim, Ene and Jay with comics and illustrations, and he himself, shut with his assistants in the back of his shop, made photos or movies with Bettie Page, Lily St. Cyr, Joan Rydell, Tempest Storm, Lili Dawn and many other tied-models.

After moving to New Jersey, where he founded a publishing company, Klaw later on was condemned for using the U.S. Postage as a means to diffuse obscene stuff and his good luck came to an end.

In the late 60's, many newly founded publishing houses on the West Coast produced scores of magazine and films. Many cult bondage movies emerged in the 70's and the misadventures of new Mistresses and Damsels in Distress, interpreted by starlets.

As for whether bondage may be included in S&M or not, I think that bondage is not so vicious as S&M, and that bondage is instead a sort of Aphrodisiac to experience NEW, Forbidden Sensations.

I give you THE FETISH GALLERY: DAMSELS IN DISTRESS GALLERY IV EDITION.

The Snuggery? What Do You Think?

Never underestimate the power of the human touch.

At least, that's the business model that Penfield, N.Y. woman Jackie Samuel is banking on. About a month ago, she launched a business offering a solid hour of cuddle time in exchange for a cool $60.

Samuel said she has looked into getting certified for her snuggle sessions, but found that the only certification available was for people looking to host group snuggling parties. Samuel just wanted to do individual cuddling. When she placed an ad for her snuggle services in the back of her local newspaper, business started to flow.

While she has gotten some inquiries from snuggle-seekers looking for a little extra affection, Samuel said the majority of her clients (all men, though she is willing to cuddle with women, too) respect her boundaries and are just looking to get cozy.

"I think a lot of people don't have someone in their life that they can receive comforting touch from on a regular basis," Samuel explained.

POLICIES & FAQ

HYGEINE POLICY

For our comfort and well being, please shower close to appointment time. Mouth should be cleansed and perfumes/colognes should not be worn.

PAYMENT POLICY

Payment is due at the beginning of each session. We accept cash, check and money order.

FAQ

Q. What should I wear to my first appointment?

A. I recommend loose fitting, natural fiber clothing, but whatever you are most comfortable in is what you should wear. Pajamas are always a good choice. There is an area for you to change when you arrive.

Q. Do we meet before we snuggle?

A. We do meet before we snuggle. We will meet briefly to review policies and ensure the comfort of both parties prior to any snuggling.

Q. What if I become sexually aroused during my session?

A. Don't worry, it happens! Although sexual activity is not permitted, arousal is perfectly normal and should not make anyone feel uncomfortable.

Q. Am I supposed to talk during my session?

A. It's really up to you. Although some people find that snuggling makes talking easier, the benefits of snuggling are not dependent upon being verbal.

Q. Do clothes/pajamas always stay on for the duration of our session?

A. Absolutely! Nudity is not permitted.

Q. Are snuggling sessions therapy?

A. Snuggling sessions are not therapy but they can be restorative, rejuvenating, comforting, playful and fun.

Q. Do I have to tip?

A. Of course you don't have to tip! It's a personal choice and we're delighted to have you either way.

Though Samuel is alone in a room at her home with her clients during snuggle time, there are always other people present in the house for security reasons. She has studied the "Cuddle Sutra" and said she would be open to the more than 100 positions detailed in the book, though most snuggle positions just come naturally when she's on the clock.

"It tends to be pretty improvisational," she said.
